Palestine: The legal background

Source materials on the legal position of the Occupied Territories in Israel are very difficult to find. Military Orders and Regulations issued by the Israeli Government especially are extremely rare, as they are not usually intended for free circulation.

The microfiche edition therefore provides a unique opportunity for studying the legal situation in these territories.

Introduction

The West Bank of the River Jordan and the Gaza Strip are areas occupied at present by Israel as a result of the June 1967 war. These territories have been subject to a number of different ruling authorities during the course of this century, and consequently the legal system is based on several different codes.

Centuries of Ottoman rule over Palestine came to an end in 1917, and in 1921 the British were given a Mandate over Palestine. Article 46 of the Palestine Order-in-Council stated that: "The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts shall be exercised in conformity with the Ottoman Laws in force in Palestine on 1st November 1914, and such later Ottoman Laws as have been or may be declared to be in force by Public Notice, and such Orders in Council, Ordinances and Regulations as are in force in Palestine at the date of the commencement of this Order, or may hereafter be applied or enacted ...". The British Mandate ended in 1948, and three years after the 1948 war Jordan annexed the West Bank. The Jordanian Constitution states: "All laws, regulations and legislative acts in force in the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan at the date of the commencement of this Constitution shall remain in force until such time as they be repealed or modified by legislation issued for that purpose" (art. 128). Over the years from 1951 to 1967 so many laws, amendments, and modifications were passed that both Banks came in effect to be ruled by the one system of the Jordanian Law, which retained clear evidence of Ottoman and Mandate influence.

Jordanian rule lasted until the June 1967 war, when Israeli forces occupied the West Bank and Gaza Strip. On June 7th, 1967, the Israeli Military Government now in control of the West Bank assumed all legislative executive and administrative powers in the area, as stated in Proclamation Two of the Military Orders: "All laws that were in force in the Area on June 7th, 1967, shall continue to be in force as long as they do not contradict this or any other Proclamation or Order made by the [the West Bank Area Commander], or conflict with the changes arising by virtue of the occupation by the Israeli Defence Forces of the Area". Jordanian Law in the West Bank Territory was thus frozen in its 1967 state.

A number of other sources - modern as well as historical - such as the Ottoman Laws and the Palestine Gazette, have been added so that the actual situation can be studied in its historical perspective. A number of indexes, compilations and English translations makes this collection a most useful instrument for scholarly and legal research.

Since 1967, as the occupying power, the Israeli authorities in the West Bank have issued more than 1,091 Military Orders and Regulations adding to or amending the Jordanian legislation that existed in 1967. These Military Orders and the Jordanian Law up to 1967, which included such Laws of Palestine and Ottoman Laws as were not repealed or modified under the British or Jordanian authorities, form the basis of the legal system in the West Bank.

The Gaza Strip is in a somewhat different situation. From 1948 to 1967, the law there remained the same combination of Ottoman and British-Mandate rules as amended by Egyptian Administrative Orders. No attempt was made to apply Egyptian Law directly to the Gaza Strip, and the law therefore remained essentially as it was under the British Mandate. Since the 1967 occupation, more than 800 Military Orders have been issued for Gaza, bringing about changes similar to those brought about in the West Bank.
